POSITION ANNOUNCEMENT

Associate Professor of Practice in Secondary English Education

The Adam Institute for Urban Teaching and School Practice at Clark University seeks an outstanding teacher-scholar in secondary English education with at least three years of secondary school experience teaching ethnically, culturally, and linguistically diverse urban youth, and with deep knowledge of pedagogical practice and multicultural literature as well as literacy education, adolescent/youth literacies, and culturally sustaining pedagogy. The successful candidate will join a faculty team dedicated to teacher education that integrates school-community partnership in an urban neighborhood.

A strong candidate also will have experience in teacher education, in particular with mentoring pre-service and/or in-service teachers, collaborating with university and school colleagues, and contributing to the development of pedagogical approaches and practices which foster equitable student achievement in English and literacy.

Responsibilities will include teaching courses focused on the practice of English education as well as literacy education at the secondary level in the Master of Arts in Teaching program, guiding a cohort of Master of Arts in Teaching students in developing their teaching practice during a full two-semester teaching internship, teaching courses in related areas for undergraduate and/or graduate students, and supporting partner school English teachers and alumni in their pedagogical practice.

Desired qualifications include interest or expertise in critical and academic literacies, critical pedagogies, critical race theory, English language learning, and/or teaching students with special needs; and an earned doctorate in English, English Education, or a closely related field such as Literacy Education or Curriculum and Instruction. The successful candidate will be appointed as an associate professor of practice, an academic-year position with an opportunity for summer teaching in the Master of Arts in Teaching program (professors of practice at Clark have full faculty status and are appointed for three-year renewable terms).

The position of Associate Professor of Practice in Secondary English affords an exceptional opportunity to contribute to the Adam Institute's widely recognized work in urban teacher education (The Master of Arts in Teaching program was the first to earn state approval "with distinction."). Clark University embraces equal opportunity and affirmative action as core values: we believe that cultivating an environment that embraces and promotes diversity is fundamental to the success of our students, our employees and our community. This commitment applies to every aspect of education, services, and employment policies and practices at Clark. Our commitment to diversity informs our efforts in recruitment, hiring and retention. All positions at Clark share in the responsibility for building a community that values diversity and the uniqueness of others by exhibiting integrity and respect in interacting with all members of the Clark community to create an atmosphere of fairness and belonging. We strongly encourage members from historically underrepresented communities, inclusive of all women, to apply.

To apply, send a letter that discusses interest, qualifications, and how a commitment to equity is reflected in your work, CV, a list of three references (at least one school-based), and a personal artifact of practice with an explanation of what it reflects about you and your practice (e.g., a course syllabus, a professional development workshop) by clicking “Apply Now” at the following link: Associate Professor of Practice in Secondary English Education. Review of applications will begin on November 1, 2020 and continue until the position is filled.
